Third Streets Story - Champions

Our Lives As Champions

old stone square hospital, gnarled tree. wicker table, unassuming. plush futon, cushions puffed to buttons perched like cupcake gumdrops. trinkets. These shelves for a year of yourself. They're line pictures, suspended in the rusty waffle maker. cassette tape churns, crackles, military jacket-stiff, white space of memory. The ink dried on paper, the infatuations caught in stasis. stale, hung. Tooth askew. Alarm clock set for 5:01, the soundless grey
It feels like straining to see out the passenger seat window, zipping past a white pulse of morning. cap. cheap Nabisco snacks. plump dog, shoosole ears picket fence. Between the slats there's a story in the bite-sized flashes of lines, forms. hang soft, pliant. Ship head on, anchored, water spread like a skirt. But the story doesn't tell itself. Maybe it's not my story to know. I wonder now: glorified cough drops. wood bench, mossed planks trapped by round was it hard to leave the captions out? Memorials without epitaphs? Anna Memphis crusted studs. scissors, lean and spidery handles that catch knuckles to find our own meaning in frames and ink and space. I look and start to see myself inside, workman's shoes, two laces, rubber soles.

Inside.
